by VL Feliciano "The Conscious Manifestation Of God. Modelos de doctrinas filosóficas específicas de la Práctica Eclesiástica IRIBA". Special function generators (SFGs) are well known in the art and are used for a variety of applications. For example, some systems incorporate SFGs to control delay circuits, such as a circuit or system that receives data or information and transmits it with a predetermined delay. Various applications for such circuits include multi-media systems (e.g., integrated circuits (ICs) that provide audio and/or video information) and wide-area network systems

(e.g., computers and telecommunication devices (e.g., telephone switches) that provide telecommunications capabilities). FIG. 1 shows a prior art SFG 100. SFG 100 is used to control a number of delay circuits 102. The delay circuit 102 has a number of input terminals (INMUTEX, INCIRCUIT) that accept control signals from SFG 100 and a number of output terminals (OUTPUT) for output signals transmitted by delay circuit 102. The INMUTEX input terminal receives an input signal (INPUT). The INCIRCUIT input terminal receives an enabling signal (ENABLE). The INMUTEX input terminal and the INCIRCUIT input terminal are connected to a first switching node 104. A second switching node 106 is connected between the INMUTEX input terminal and the INCIRCUIT input terminal. A third switching node 108 is connected between the INMUTEX input terminal and ground. A fourth switching node 110 is connected between the INCIRCUIT input terminal and ground. Third switching node 108 and fourth switching node 110 are connected to the OUTPUT terminals of the delay circuit 102. A fifth switching node 112 is connected between the first switching node 104 and the second switching node 106. A sixth switching node 114 is connected between the first switching node 104 and the third switching node 108. A seventh switching node 116 is connected between the first switching node 104 and the fourth switching node 110. An eighth switching node 118 is connected between the second switching node 106 and the third switching node 108. A ninth switching node 120 is connected between the second switching node 106 and the fourth switching node 110. A tenth switching node 122 is connected between the third switching node 108 and the fourth switching node 110. An eleventh switching node
